The UCLA Alan D. Leve Center for Jewish Studies is pleased to announce a call for the Jack H. Skirball Graduate Fellowship in Modern Jewish Culture. The Fellowship is open to any UCLA graduate student engaged in research on one of the many realms of modern Jewish culture (including but not limited to anthropology, dance, film, history, language, literature, music, and theater). The successful candidate will be called upon to teach one continuing education course in the fall in her/his field of research at the Skirball Cultural Center (6-8 hours of instruction) and to actively participate in Center activities.

The Skirball Fellowship in Modern Jewish Culture will provide a stipend of $20,000 plus resident tuition and fees for the 2016-17 AY.

Please submit a summary of up to 500 words describing your research and a list of up to 5 possible continuing education courses to the Center for Jewish Studies by April 4, 2016. Please also submit 2 letters of recommendation, one of which should come from your dissertation advisor. All other pending and awarded funding sources must also be disclosed.
